In what may be termed the "oncology decade," the primary objectives are 1) determining what is the maximum safe dose of radiation to the tumor and 2) what is the maximum safe dose to the surrounding organs of the patient. The majority of trials have been small, retrospective, nonrandomized comparisons of traditional therapeutic modalities, with few prospectively designed trials undertaken. Of the therapeutic modalities under consideration, surgery, chemotherapy, and radiotherapy have emerged as the principal modalities. Additional modalities under study include hyperthermia, intratumor chemotherapy, and interstitial techniques. Currently, the only modality for which data are available for a defined stage of disease is radiotherapy. Research to date indicates that adequate doses of radiation can be delivered in the range of 4,000 to 5,000 rads to the tumor area, and limited doses of radiation to the normal brain, lungs, bone marrow, skin, and other organs of the body, with the largest risk to the lung, bone marrow, and skin.

The authors conclude that it is time to undertake a formal program of research to determine the maximum safe dose of radiation to the tumor and the surrounding organs of the patient.

P.) Polygonum violaceum Polygonum violaceum is a species of flowering plant in the knotweed family known by the common name purple knotweed. It is native to western North America from Alaska to Mexico, and it is known throughout the eastern two-thirds of that continent as an introduced species. It is common in the western United States and Canada. It is found in dry soils and disturbed areas. Description The plant grows in a scruffy crown of spreading, hairy green stems 15 to 60 centimeters long. There is a rosette of leaves at the base of each stem. The leaves have a petiole and a blade joined at the base, sometimes with a few smaller ones growing from it. The blade is kidney-shaped and 2 to 7 centimeters long by 1 to 5 centimeters wide. The inflorescence is a cluster of many flowers, each flower about a centimeter wide and purple. The fruit is a light brown capsule divided into five narrow segments which contain small peas-like seeds. Taxonomy The plant was first described as Polygonum violaceum in 1832 by Karl Sigler, based on specimens he collected in Columbia County in the state
