Cervical pain that does not get better or worse with exposure to the cold, or neck pain that gets worse with exposure to the cold is called cervicalgia. When treating cervicalgia the physician will first try to determine what the cause of the neck pain is and treat the cause rather than just try to treat the neck pain. More than 40% of your cervical area is covered by muscle and ligament which can be strained and inflamed and lead to neck pain. Most people with acute neck pain also have low back pain. Rheumatoid arthritis, rotator cuff injury, and nerve impingement can also cause neck pain. This pain is usually treated with physical therapy. The use of heat, ice, ultrasound, massage, heat packs, traction, gentle exercises, and other techniques can be used. This can keep the muscles toned and flexible, reduce the swelling, ease the pain, and decrease the chance of recurrence. When treating a patient with cervicalgia or neck pain it is important to take a complete medical history. If the patient has neck pain or has had previous neck surgery the history and physical should include questions on: Stress What precipitated the pain? Physical therapy The use of a cervical collar is determined by the pain, the amount of pain and the symptoms. When treating cervicalgia it is important to make sure that the symptoms are decreasing. The patient should be counseled on the importance of regular exercise and what to do if
