Actor Monty Montgomery has sued the State of Texas, claiming that the state didn't grant him an injunction against the neighbors who ruined his reputation. The lawsuit was filed this week in Oklahoma County District Court, and alleges that Montgomery's neighbors at the Time-Warner campus used large piles of rocks to damage his construction. Montgomery also claims that the noise and commotion from the neighbors caused him to lose his rental properties. Montgomery's attorney, Brian Grewing, sent a letter to the campus security department at Texas A&M University on March 23, requesting permission to obtain an injunction. Grewing told The Texas Tribune that he asked the school to assist in obtaining such an order because "the noise and the rock throwing on our property led to irreparable harm." The suit claims that the campus security department, while declining the request, actually went ahead and issued a temporary restraining order that prohibited the use of boulders on the campus but allowed the residents to continue throwing rocks at the Montgomery house. It's not clear whether the injunction actually went through. Grewing said that his client has sought an injunction under the state's civil practice and remedies code, and that he has sent an "application for injunction" to the court. Grewing declined to comment on whether the order has been filed. Montgomery was taken off the large campus movie set in December after he allegedly made unwanted sexual advances toward a female actor, as reported by The Hollywood Reporter. His role in the movie, called "Secrets of the Bible," involved fighting a war in the Old Testament. Montgomery has been arrested before for allegedly harassing women in public. Grewing also tells The Tribune that Montgomery is seeking $1 million in actual damages, as well as $1 million in punitive damages. A representative for the Texas A&M University did not respond to multiple inquiries by The Tribune.This invention relates to driver circuit and, more particularly, to an asymmetrical pulse width modulation driver circuit capable of reducing transient effects when the input data inputted to an asymmetrical driver circuit include data signals having differing transition times, such as, for example, the data input signals for two bistable systems. Classical driver circuits are symmetrical driver circuits which do not distort the input data signal. However, with the advent of more advanced integrated circuit design, driver circuits which are asymmetrical in

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical recording and/or reproducing apparatus, and more particularly, to an optical pickup of an optical recording and/or reproducing apparatus using the blu-ray disc. 2. Background of the Related Art In the state of the art, an optical recording and/or reproducing apparatus is designed to store a number of programs. It is important for the optical recording and/or reproducing apparatus to play back the recorded programs without interruption. It is possible to prevent interruption of playback by storing data of at least one program in the form of a Blu-ray disc. However, the data is taken in by using a single-beam optical system. Because the data is stored as continuous signals, if the data is taken in at a predetermined portion by a single-beam optical system, the playback by a single-beam optical system becomes interrupted. For example, if the data is taken in at the time instant when the data is recorded at the predetermined portion of the Blu-ray disc, the playback at the following time instant can be interrupted. Accordingly, the playback is interrupted between one program and another during the course of playback of the programs when using a single-beam optical system. In order to solve the above-mentioned problem, there is disclosed an optical pickup capable of simultaneously taking in data from two different parts of a disc or recording data to two different parts of a disc. However, such an optical pickup has many limitations because it is required to arrange a light source, an object lens and the like on both sides of a disc.The third most popular business in the whole country. Definitely wish these guys would come to London and give it some proper competition. They have amazing products and a pretty good selection at best of price. They get on with customers very well, and they also have an amazing store staff in the Mil. Check them out if you're on the M1. Also a decent place to stock up before you hit the road. I like this business because they have really good products at really good prices, excellent service and great facilities for storing of goods. This is the best store I have ever visited. I highly recommend this business to the public.[Partial spectrophotometry for determination of blood glucose and lactate].
