The group, set up in May by allies of Clinton's 2016 campaign chairman, Howard Wolfson, tapped a long list of donors to pay for five full-time employees, according to New York magazine. While donations from the individuals themselves are still technically being accepted, they have yet to be received. The news of Correct the Record's contract with the group, which is managed by top Clinton aide Huma Abedin, doesn't sit well with the campaign of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), who has been hammering his rival as increasingly unwell, with Sanders himself having gained the support of former candidate Martin O'Malley. "The failure of the Clinton campaign to provide basic health care updates to the American people is inexcusable," Alejandra

Reyes, national press secretary for Correct the Record, said in a statement, adding that the Clinton campaign "has yet to provide a single update on her health." The statement continued: "Clinton and her allies continue to downplay the seriousness of her 'pneumonia,' suggesting Clinton's health issues do not rise to the level of the 'plague' being suffered by Donald Trump and his campaign staff." After Sanders announced Wednesday night that Clinton "suffered from a very bad bout of pneumonia" last Friday, the campaign did not provide any additional updates on the former secretary of state's health. . The Use of Telemonitoring to Assess Blood Pressure Changes of Antihypertensive Medication in Children With Hypertension: An International, Randomized, Double-blinded Controlled Trial. Journal of Medical Internet Research. 11 (3). (2018). doi:10.2196/jmir.9118

Pediatric and neonatal hypertension is considered an important risk factor in the development of cerebral damage, arterial pressure control and, consequently, in the outcome of hypertensive patients. Blood pressure (BP) monitoring through telemedicine systems is a helpful tool in the management of pediatric hypertension. The present protocol study is the first randomized, double-blind controlled trial that evaluates telemedicine as a tool to assess the changes in BP of children and adolescents with hypertensive parents and other related risk factors.

Objective 1. To compare the effect of telemonitoring to conventional monitoring in the control of hypertension in hypertensive children and adolescents. Determination of changes in BP after 10 days. The continuous interdialytic BP (CID-BP) of subjects will be recorded, and the BP will be recorded on paper and electronically every hour. Comparisons between measurements will be made using the Student t-test for paired data or the Wilcoxon test. The primary outcome will be the difference between the mean diastolic BP (MBP-DBP) between the initial and final days of the study (10-day analysis). Analysis of variance will be used to compare the subjects with changes in MBP-DBP. The time to reduce antihypertensive drug doses will be calculated using survival analysis (Kaplan-Meier estimator). For all the statistical analyses, a $p \leq 0.05$ will be considered statistically significant. The usefulness and safety of the telemedicine system will be evaluated by patients, health care workers, and parents of enrolled subjects. Subjective perception of the telemedicine system will be evaluated using the adapted version of the Atención al Cáncer Infantil questionnaire, which has been validated for pediatric
